POLITICAL NOTES.

—The salaries of Post Masters will be readjusted on July 1st.

—Senator Sumner's brain and spinal column need rest. He has obtained a divorce.

—Pere Hyacinthe has a little baby rosebud, and will, of course, not stop with a single bud.

—The Modoc is a man and a brother, and we must take him for what he is—just as soon as we can.

—Judah P. Benjimun, ex-Confederate Secretary of State has a lucrative law practice in London.

—The political cadron is beginning to seeth.—Freeburg Courier.

We can't seethe point.

—Galveston tried cumulative voting. Things got mixed and every body was elected and every body beaten.

—Dr. B. F. Wagenseller, of Selinsgrove, Snyder county, is a Republican candidate for State Senator.

—"An informal Session of Congress" is what the St. Louis Republican calls the Congressional Convention.

—General Schenck, our minister to the court of St. James is tired of London gayeties and wants to come home.

—The Democrats of Centre county have instructed for Sheriff Perks, of Clearfield county, for State Treasurer.

—Edward Scull, Esq., has been chosen Delegate to the Republican State Convention from Somerset county. A good selection.

—The Cincinnati Enquirer says the Democratic party can only live by giving up its traditions, and the Republican by expelling its corruption.

—Chinese emigration to this country is on the increase, at the rate of a thousand souls per month. California retains the greatest part of this population.

—George W. Childs, of the Philadelphia Ledger, is spoken of in connection with the Petersburg mission. There can be no better appointment than that of Mr. Childs.

—The Massachusetts Legislature is terribly exercised over the Hoosac Tunnel, but the state has a score or two of bores, equally tedious and less expensive. Butler is counted in.

—Our Democratic cotemporaries have two sources of trouble, namely: One that President Grant takes his leisure so coolly, and the other that the government is being run so successfully.

—According to the New Orleans Picayune, legislators can be purchased in Mississippi from $5 to $100 each. In Albany the rate is rather higher, though the latter sum is not an unusual one.

—The hanging of men has got to be such a common occurrence that it no longer impresses the vicious with fear or the humane with sorrow. We are now averaging a hanging every day in the year.

—The Williamsport municipal election resulted in the success of the Republican ticket. The Local Optionists polled nearly as many votes as the Democrats, while the Liberals only polled seventy votes.

—Little interest is felt in the conference of Congressmen at St. Louis. It was an assemblage, in the first place, out of order, because these gentlemen have no right to assemble anywhere, as Congressmen, but in Washington city.

—They have a business-like method of procedure in Kansas. In the midst of the excitement caused by the discoveries of bodies under the Bender house, a small board appeared on one of the graves announcing that the deserted Bender claim had been pre-empted by another settler. In the meantime more graves are being found, but Benders aren't.

—"There is no way of keeping rascality confined to the politicians," says a Philadelphia paper. Casting our eagle eye on the record of the last Congress, with its Credit Mobilier and back pay swindles, we remark that if rascality is not confined to politicians, there is more of it than we supposed. That body had enough of it to make a fair average for forty millions of people.

THE condition of Louisiana is alike perilous and scandalous. If Congress, at the last session, had had the necessary independence and firmness, and the sense of justice which the occasion required, the President would have had no excuse for supporting by the bayonet a State Government in Louisiana which the most distinguished Republican Senators have declared is founded upon an infamous usurpation. If the time spent in consummating the back pay fraud had been honestly devoted to the settlement of affairs in Louisiana, the scandal we now witness would have been avoided.

FAULT-FINDERS.—The world is full of chronic fault-finders. Nothing can please them. They take delight in growling and grumbling over everything they meet. If anything is good, they complain because it is not better. Humanity has no bright side to the grumblers. It looks black, dreary, hopeless to them, from whatever point of view they examine it. They overlook the virtues of an individual, and hold up a single fault to judge his character from. They denounce a party as corrupt because a few rascals disgrace themselves by unworthy acts. The church is false because a few hypocrites find shelter within it. The world is on the high road to destruction, and everything indicates the depravity of man. We do not envy the happiness of these growlers. Their unhappy frame of mind is about the only pleasure they enjoy. It may sound paradoxical, but the social misery they create is to them a source of enjoyment. A single hopeful heart is worth a regiment of these fault-finders. Humanity has its bright side—beautiful and attractive to those who seek it. The world is alive with public and private virtue and we should be ready at all times to foster and encourage this element of social comfort and public happiness.

OUR NEIGHBOR OVER THE WAY.

It appears to be impossible for the editor of the Watchman to write an article without calling some one a liar. Judging others by himself we presume (and we fear in this case it is not the most righteous judgment) he fails to understand that anyone of different views from his own can make a statement prompted by a sincere conviction of truth, rather than by the morbid desire to misrepresent and falsify to the belittling of his opponents. He meets argument after the fashion of every hot-headed politician, who finding himself baffled at every turn flings back the boyish retort "you lie."

To any one who is at all conversant with the history of our country for the past twenty years, it is patent that in no period, before or since, has the nation been cursed with an administration so corrupt, so treacherous as those of Pierce and Buchannon which paved the way for the Southern Confederacy, unlocked the vaults of our treasury and doors of our arsenals and put money and weapons in the hands of traitors. It was in this period when the democrats had control, that the country was led to the very verge of civil war, and only the loss of their political supremacy was the excuse for plunging the nation in the pit of self destruction, from which it has been lifted by the Republican party and loyal Democrats of the North. But some of the filth clings to her garments still which manifests itself in the Ku Klux Klan the Louisiana murders and occasionally in the venturesome breathings of the press which lived through the war only by the forbearance of the people.

THE tendency of democracy is toward ignorance. The church and the public school are the natural enemies of this fossilized party, that exist only in a name, and is kept alive only by the remembrances of what it was in former years. Aware of this enmity the democratic leaders in those Sates where it still holds power, are doing all they can to suppress the church and the system of free schools. The free school system in Texas would be overthrown were it in the power of the Democracy to do so. Every obstacle is thrown in its way, and but for the extraordinary efforts of its friends it would have been crushed out long ago. We believe the day is not far distant when Texas will release itself from the thraldon of democracy, and with a republican State government, move on to the destiny which awaits it. Once enlighten its people by a liberal system of education, and the opponent of free schools will be looked upon as a public enemy.

And we find this holds good in all localities. In that State, county or section of a county where the people enjoy the greatest liberality of education and knowledge of the outside world by means of railways, and interchanging commerce, where its people are most enterprising and thrifty, we find the democracy on the decline, and the strenuous efforts of the democratic leaders to resusitate their dying party will hardly meet success in this age of rapid growth and improvement of our country.

LOCAL FREIGHTS.

There appears to be a general awakening to a sense of the injustice of the freight tariffs on the Bald Eagle Valley Railroad, and the consequent heavy burden of taxation upon every business enterprise in Centre county dependent upon this corporation to transport their wares to market. With every natural advantage with which any people could be favored for the manufacture of iron and lumber, this community is cut off from a market for their products by these exhorbitant freights, and manufacturers find it impossible to compete with Pittsburg and other manufactories along the main line who are hundreds of miles further from market.

The people of Bellefonte and Centre county are rejoicing over the establishment of the Bellefonte Car Manufacturing Co. in our borough, in anticipation of the consequent increase in population and wealth of our town, and are again perplexed by the action of the Bellefonte Iron Co., in removing their works to Williamsport.

The Bellefonte Car Manufacturing Co., with the natural advantages this location affords, which of themselves would afford a handsome profit in the reduction of the cost of manufacture, could not be induced to locate here until special rates of freights were granted them.

It appears, then, that these exhorbitant rates not only eat up the profits of the manufacturer, but also these natural advantages which are themselves a handsome per centage on money invested.—We cannot believe the management of the B. E. V. R. R. have so much reduced their rates to the Bellefonte Car Manufacturing Co. as to make the carrying of their freight a loss to the road, and if they are able to make this reduction to this company, why should it not have been made to the Bellefonte Iron Co., and to every manufacturer on the line of their road?

The Glass Works, the Bellefonte Iron Co., and other manufactories, have been compelled to succumb to these difficulties which have seriously crippled all enterprises in the county. The Howard Iron Works were for years unsuccessful, until the present proprietors secured the advantages now granted to the car company, and we do not see why a party of wealthy men should receive privileges denied the public. It is evident the car company have only received fair rates of freight, which still leave a profit to the road, and a concession which, in justice, should be granted to every man in Centre county, whether he ship one pound or a thousand tons freight per year.

This is not a grievance to the people of Bellefonte alone, or to the manufacturers alone, but to every man in Centre county who owns a foot of land or a dollar's worth of property, and a relief from this grievance will give an impetus to the development of this county which cannot fail to increase the importance and wealth of the B. E. V. R. R.

We clip the following from the Pittsburg Commerical, which is a true statement of the cause of the action of the Bellefonte Iron Co.:

"The Bellefonte Iron Company has concluded to move its works th Williamsport. The reason given for the removal is the exhorbitant freight on the Bald Eagle Valley Railroad, which makes a competiton with other mills not obliged to use the transportation of this road, a difficult undertaking.

It is stated that freight costs nearly as much from Bellefonte to Tyrone as from Tyrone to Philadelphia, and that Pittsburgh manufacturers can ship to Philadelphia at about two-thirds of what is charged from Bellefonte. At Williamsport, being on a main line of road, and not on a branch, the rates are much lower, and hence the removal."

OUR WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE.

WASHINGTON, May 17, 1873.

The strife in Louisiana having ceased, the condition of affairs having become more settled, and the excitement consequent thereupon having passed away, we are now in a condition to institute an inquiry as to the correctness and justness of the charges against the administration for unwarrantable meddling in State affairs made by the opposition press. There must have been something wrong in the management of affairs or these things would not have occurred. The Democracy find no trouble in discovering the cause of things that go amiss. What to other minds may appear very complicated and inexplicable is to them as clear as day. Their method of arriving at conclusions is one of the most simple that can be imagined. When they can not account for any circumstance, that they deem unfortunate, by ordinary methods of investigation they conclude immediately that President Grant was the cause of it, that the whole difficulty can be traced directly to some act, or some omission of duty, by the chief magistrate. This method is, in one respect, most convenient, in that it relieves them of the trouble of doing any severe thinking over such preplexing social problems.

However, it is, prehaps, fully as absurd to say that no one was to blame for the unhappy strife that we lately witnessed in Louisiana as it is to attribute every thing that goes wrong to President Grant. No doubt one great cause of such violent outbreaks is the antagonism of races, the sentiment still existing in the minds of many people in that section of our country that the whites are the natural superior of the black and there should be a distinction between them recognized by law. A certain class of politicians, historians and philosophers are much given to the use of the term "war of races." This antagonism between the white and black races, occasionally manifested in the South, is not necessarily the normal condition of those races, as some would have us believe.

Now, let us inquire whether or not any portion of the blame for the existence of the late troubles is attributable to President Grant. No one but an arrant fool or a fawning sycophant will claim for him that he does everything as it should be done, but there is such a thing as impartial criticism of public men without descending to abusiveness. A great many persons, however, do not seem to know the difference between independence and absolutely foul and slanderous abuse.

It is difficult to see what course could have been pursued by the administration other than that adopted. No impartial man can divest himself of the opinion that there was an immense amount of fraud connected with the late Louisiana election, and it is difficult to determine which party is worst and which is best. It is doubtful whether either Kellogg or McEnery were legally elected. One or the other must have received a majority of votes had all votes been cast to express the will of the voters. That there was fraud, misrepresentation, intimidation and bribery scarcely admits of a doubt. Such seemed to be the opinion of the Senate Committee. Such seemed to be the opinion of the President, as shown by the fact that he desired to be relieved of the necessity of choosing between the two pretended State governments. The Senate refused to decide the matter, and the President was compelled to decide one way or the other. How did he decide? By following the decisions of the courts of the State and the United States. It is charged that those decisions were wrong: that the courts were corrupted; that the State courts were not legally appointed, and that the United States court exceeded its jurisdiction in deciding upon the question of the legality of State election boards. All these may, or they may not, be true, but who made the President of the United States the arbiter of such questions of law? Where is there any authority in the Constitution by which he can declare the decisions of either State or Federal courts void?

Were McEnery a very saint and Kellogg a very devil, this could not have effected the course to be adopted by the President. As the Executive is but one of three co-ordinate branches of government, he has no more the right to assume judicial than legislative functions. Strange to say those men and those journals, that cry out most about usurpation and the like, are the very men and the very journals that demand of him that he should usurp the functions of another department of government. What could satisfy such men? Ought not the country to be grateful for a chief magistrate who dares to confine himself to his own proper duties, who dares to disregard the counsels of such unsafe and erratic advisers?

For several months past there has been much complaint from visitors to Mount Vernon, the home of General Washington, concerning the condition in which the house and grounds are kept. The estate is owned by the Ladies' Mount Vernon Association, a society organized under the laws of Virginia, and of which Miss Pamela Cunningham is regent. The first public complaint was from Mrs. Emily Briggs, a lady of literary reputation, known by the non de plume of "Olivia." About a year ago she wrote a series of letters, which were widely published, in which she charged Miss Cunningham with incapacity for the discharge of her duty, with neglecting to keep the buildings and grounds in repair, with failing to account for the moneys that came into her custody for the association, with charging exhorbitant and unlawful fees on account of visitors, and with granting a monopoly to the Steamer Arrow in the carrying of visitors to Mount Vernon. These charges have been reiterated by many other persons, but there has been no alteration in the management of affairs.

The Board of Visitors appointed by the Governor of Virginia held meetings at the Imperial Hotel in this city on Wednesday and Thursday of last week, and while they were in session Dr. C. P. Howland preferred charges against Miss Cunningham for being "an habitual drunkard, and of being intoxicated for days together, and while intoxicated of being seen improperly dressed." This caused an excited discussion, in which Judge Thomas, chairman of the board of visitors, defended Miss Cunningham, and stated that the board had made an investigation of the manner in which the affairs of the association had been conducted and found no grounds for the charges. He stated, however, that the board had decided that they were not authorized to enter into a complete investigation or to hear evidence, as that sort of duty belonged to the board of vice-regents.

The vice-regents were in secret session Thursday evening, and it is understood, had the charges against Miss Cunningham under consideration.—Should they find that there are good grounds for the charges, or conclude that the business of the association can be better managed by some one else, it is thought Miss Cunningham will resign, in which case Mrs. James Brooks, widow of the lately deceased Member of Congress from New York, will, in all probability, be elected to succeed her.

—During the winter season crowds of people flock to Washington to enjoy the round of gayety and fashionable dissipation for which our city is so famous. During the summer season crowds of people leave Washington and flock to the sea shore and to the watering places to enjoy the same gay round. To a person of the disposition of your correspondent Washington is most attractive in the summer. We have our broad Potomac whose peaceful bosom, on moonlight evenings, are covered by hundreds of row boats filled with singing maidens and shouting swains. We have some of the most delightful parks, where, of an afternoon, you may see hundreds of people, young and old, merry and sedate, engaged in playing croquet. And last, but not least, we have our open air concerts at the President's grounds on Saturday afternoons, and at East Capitol Park on Wednesday afternoons, on which occasions the Marine Band discourses the music of Beethoven, and Shubert, and Verdi, and Schumann, and Mozart, and Strauss, and Gounod, and Wagner, and Heineck and the other great masters, in the most artistic style. The beauty of these concerts are that they are truly republican, free to everybody, of high and low degree. The President of the nation, the stately Senator, the government clerk and the hard working mechanic come to hear and see. The high-born, aristocratic dame and the weary sewing girl come to enjoy the fresh, healthy air and drink in the delicious strains of music. This afternoon, as I sit at my window writing these words to you, dear reader, I see the gay crowds passing along the street on their way to the President's to attend the first open air concert of this year. Reader, if you ever come to the Capitol in the summer season you must not fail to go to "The Music." I must close my letter and follow the throng on the street.

LISAVETA.

A RUSSIAN-FOLK SONG.

PARAPHRASED BY FANNY RAYMOND RITTER.

Ivan Ivanowitch, no wife
Is half so glad as thine:
Forever happy be her life,
And peaceful her decline!
With smiling face and kindly will,
He enters in the house;
Well pleased, she finds the lover, still
Unaltered, in the spouse.
His honest lips her pure lips press—
That kiss, how sweet, how free!—
Half-way she meets his proud caress,
Undoubting, openly.
His joy is hers, and his her care;
He cries, "True, just and good
Art thou, my Lisaveta fair;
Thine is my best heart's blood!"
He sows with her, he reaps with her
He shares with her his store;
He plans with her, he dreams with her
He leaves her nevermore.
Ivan Ivanowitch, no wife
Is half so glad as thine;
Forever happy be her life,
And peaceful her decline!

In Memoriam.

HUGH N. McALLISTER.

Eulogies in Memory of the Deceased Delivered at a Meeting of the Bar of Centre, Huntingdon, Clinton and Clearfield counties, in the Court House at Bellefonte, Thursday, May 8th, 1873.

Hon. C. A. Mayer having been called to the chair, and appropriate resolutions presented and read, Hon. Samuel Linn of the Bellefonte bar, said:

MR. PRESIDENT: The occasion that has called us together to-day is fraught with sorrow; but in the theme presented for contemplation and remarks we find we can give free expression of our grief. There is here, sir, no temptation to drag out from retirement any delinquency that may be polished over when clothed in the garb of virtue; no mystery to be passed by in painful silence, or covered by the mantle of charity. No: these things have no presence or place here. The theme here, to-day, is upon the record of a long virtuous, useful and well spent life; and the living of that life fills us with pride that such a man lived and had his being among us. We are tempted, sir, because he was one of us, to appropriate to ourselves some of the honor which belonged to him alone, because he was our associate and our friend; a friend who has been called to his reward by a summons which no mortal may disobey, and which no mortal can disregard.

Of his early life, I am not here to speak, for I could give no just account of it. We are here, sir, to deal with him as a man, as a lawyer, as a citizen, as a neighbor, and in all these characters we knew him well. He first came to the bar, if my recollection is correct, in the year 1835, and was admtited to the bar of this county. Of the early years of his practice, I know but little from observation, for I had not then entered upon the pursuits that belong to mature life; but in his after years I knew him well and knew him to appreciate and esteem him. He was a man, anywhere and always devoted to duty. What his hand found to do, he did it with his might; and his sense of duty, as stated in the resolutions, was the guiding star of his life. He knew no other motive; and no matter what obstacles might be found in his path to deter, he put them all aside, and pressed forward to the completion of what he felt to be his duty.

As a lawyer he was profound, learned in the science of his profession; not bound down by the precedents, for he well knew the elementary principles of the profession which he practiced, and which enabled him to arrive at the proper conclusion of any question he undertook to examine and determine. We all know his position at the bar, and with what success he practiced here for a long series of years; and if there was any necessity for further evidence, the records to be found in the vaults of this house would attest to us of his entire devotion to the interests of his profession. As a citizen he was present in every good work. What he undertook to do, he did well. He never engaged in anything and did a part; what he attempted, he finished, and finished it well.

As a member of the church to which he belonged, he was zealous, pious, faithful, liberal; in all respects he acted his part well. As a citizen, he was benevolent, kind, and eminently hospitable. His doors were always open. His table was free; and if any of the poor around us were here to speak, they would tell many deeds of benevolence, wherein the right hand of the deceased was never allowed to know what the left hand did.

I could speak of many of the virtues of the departed in all the departments of life; for in every department he acted his part well and faithfully. He was kind to the younger members of the bar; ever ready to relieve them of the embarrassments thrown in their way, of which there are so many to the younger members of the profession. And how many of them seek advice in this wise, which they can only learn by inquirtng of their elder brethern. No matter what the business before him, or how pressing, it would be temporarily set aside that he might give counsel to those who needed it. He lived to see the advancement of many of these members of his profession.

He was faithful to the court; and I believe he never stated as a principle in law that which he did not believe to be well sustained by authority. He had reason to say so, for he never examined a case without examining it thoroughly, and he never attempted to speak upon a subject without his mind giving it full attention and much study.

He was a thorough lawyer, as his success at home and in the supreme courts testify. We all know how diligent he was in the practice of his profession. He came fully up to the definition of duty given by Lord Braugham, in his famous speech relative to the duty of counsel to his client; "that on advocate in the discharge of that duty should know but one man in all the world, and that man his client." He went straight forward in the discharge of that duty, looking neither to the right nor to the left. No matter how much labor and inconvenience; no matter what trouble, he went through it all to save his client. He served them honestly. Of his large practice I do not think it necessary to call to recollection that which is so well known to every person in this vicinity.

He has gone, sir, to his God. Of those who were members of the bar when he was admitted to membership, I believe but four remain. All the others have been gathered to their reward. To-day their remains are resting in the tomb, their graves covered with the green sward and the wild growing vine. Now he has gone to his reward. To say he was a perfect man I will not undertake. No mortal was ever perfect. He had his weaknesses and defects; but they never descended to the degree of moral delinquency. Neither did immorality ever belong to his character. He was upright, virtuous, honest, learned and intelligent; and well for us, Mr. President, if, when we are called to yield up our accounts and to answer to the summons which has, record of our lives as few imperfections as did he. We behold his imperfections with his great virtues as we do the spots on the sun. They are visible because of the height of that luminary. So with him; but with men less virtuous, less learned, and with lower attainments, those things would not have been noticed. Because he was great, good, eminent and virtuous; because he was a man of eminent piety, those little defects of character, shone out in him when they would have been invisible in others.

There are those here who knew him better than I did, although I stood beside him at the bar, and was engaged in the profession long enough to know he was the kind of a man I have described. Others more intimate with him, who are present here, can better express his admirable qualities than I can; but to no man will I yield the appreciation of character that I hold to-day in memory of our departed friend. Now, may we say of him, in view of his life, in view of his virtues and in view of the manner in which he discharaed every duty belonging to him, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Ex-Governor Curtin, as Chairman of the Committee of the Constitutional Convention, said:

MR. PRESIDENT: I think it very kind in the members of the bar to select me to second the resolutions which have just been read, and which so faithfully and truly portray the character of the citizen we have lost; for it is many years since circumstances separated me from the fellowship of the members of this bar, with whom I enjoyed so long such intimate and pleasant relations.

The death of this man causes me to think of the period of time when he came to the bar; and to remember that save and except the venerable gentleman who sits upon your right (referring to, Hon. James McManus,) the members of the bar in practice in Centre county, when Mr. McAllister commenced his professional life, are all dead. Then that kind, hospitable and just man, so genial in his nature, so rigid in his integrity, Judge Burnside, was upon the bench. That learned lawyer, William W. Potter was then the leading advocate of this and the surrounding counties; and that example of learning and purity which attracted to him by common consent the title of "honest," was in practice, John Blanchard, a little the junior of Potter; his equal in learning in all respects, to him I was attached, as I have been to any man living or dead, for his just, useful and pure life. The genial, delightful companion, learned and eloquent advocate, Bond Valentine, was then at the bar. The gifted Petriken, who died so early in his life, was then living. James Burnside was then in full force, and James T. Hale, both of whom had the honor of a seat on the judicial bench, and discharged their duties of a private or public character with a measure of ability and integrity which attracted to them so much of the affection and confidence of this community. One by one they have gone. And now another is added to the list of the dead, and our memories are charged with the departure of one more bright and shining light of this bar. More than all that, more than an admiration of the legal learning, or the strifes and antagonisms which follow the professional life, we hold in our memories their characters as citizens of the community, and we measure to them our gratitude by the good they did during their lives.

I know full well that Mr. McAllister never had those attractive, magnetic qualities which makes a man what is termed popular. He never did—it was not in his nature to condescend to the arts by which men too often attain to high official position, or who become popular in the political acceptation of that term; and yet I doubt much whether we could have stood over the grave of one citizen of Centre county who would be so universally mourned, and whose loss would be more severely felt. It is not the bar alone that sustains this loss. The society in which this man moved; the people to whom he gave an example of integrity and virtue; the community that surrounded him, has received a wound that is bleeding to-day, and throughout all this region of Pennsylvania there will be sincere mourning, becauss a useful citizen and a good man has died.

Mr. McAllister carried into the convention to reform the Constitution of the State the same indomitable energy, the same zeal and diligent labor, which wasted his life while he was engaged in the discharge of his professional duties at home. He took to that body a sincere conviction of the great trust given to him by the people of this Commonwealth; and while there devoted himself to the task assigned him with such assiduity as to surprise all his colleagues who were not acquainted with his earnest nature; for they had never known a man like him—a man with such devotion, zeal and anxiety. He worked at night when other men slept. His convictions of duty were intensified by the zeal of his nature, and in pursuit of these convictions he deliberately formed and carried to the Convention, worked out the remnant of his life, already so far reduced by his laborious life.

I saw my friend and neighbor often during his last illness. Indeed for a time I was the only person who could see him, except the members of his family, who had gathered around him with so much solicitude and care. Every day I went to the Convention I was called upon to answer numberless and anxious questions by men who never saw him before he took his seat in that body. To know him was to respect and admire him; but if they did not know him personally, his colleagues soon learned to appreciate his integrity, and the force and ability with which he maintained his settled opinions, and so great was his anxiety to effect reform in the organic law of the State, and discharge this public trust with fidelity, that when his mind wandered, and the grim monster was feeling for his heart-strings, his thoughts were in the Convention, where he expected not to make a reputation, but to do good. I am glad to say to his friends and neighbors in this place, that his last office was discharged with the same fidelity to duty, that he discharged all his trusts through life; and when death finally closed the scene, we sent your neighbor back, to be put in the ground in Bellefonte, under the evergreen trees of our beautiful cemetery, where the winds of heaven will sigh his requiem, as they will, my friends and neighbors, yours and mine before long.

To the members of this bar he leaves a priceless legacy in his example. Let them take the life of this man and imitate his discharge of professional duty. For us who survive him in this village and county, let us take his blameless life, his integrity and labor, as an example, and let us so walk in our life, that when we come to die, and be carried to our final resting place, that our friends and neighbors can truly say, as is said in those resolutions, that we led a life worthy of the imitation of those who come after us.

I said what I deemed proper and true of Mr. McAllister in the Convention when fitting honors were paid his memory in that body, and am glad to say that the delegates upon all of whom he has made so favorable an impression, received what was said with marked approbation. They believed me when I told them that Mr. McAllister was virtuous, honest and religious. I am glad I bore such testimony to his character, for I knew well that in the words I spoke I uttered the sentiment of the hearts of his neighbors fresh and warm, and that all who knew him would feel that all that was said of him was true.

I cannot trust myself to say more. My venerable friend (turning to Mr. McManus,) we will soon be gone, and then new and younger men will take our places. We are the last of that body of men who were at the bar when Mr. McAllister first made his appearance in our courts, and who since has illuminated his profession of this and surrounding counties. To the dead, farewell. Let us who remain imitate his noble example.

Senator John Scott, representing the Huntingdon county bar, said:

MR. PRESIDENT: In rising in behalf of the members of the bar of Huntingdon county, to second the resolutions which have been read, I feel that I can but repeat the sentiments which have already been expressed by those who lived nearer and knew better that member of the bar whose death we are here to mourn, and to whose memory we are here to pay respect.

The iron tongue of time, sir, which has just sounded out its voice upon the air reminds us how rapidly the fleeting hours have gone since first we met him, and how rapidly we, too, are going to that bourne to which he has gone, and to which we are all tending.

Coming to the bar in 1846, I met Mr. McAllister in full and successful practice; a practice which he retained so long as he continued to visit the courts of Huntingdon county—some fifteen or sixteen years. Often his colleague and often his adversary, I had ample opportunity of studying and knowing him as a lawyer; and, sir, no man could meet him—no man could be associated with him—no man could contend against him—without feeling that he was contending against the power of conscience and the truth; for whatever Hugh N. McAllister uttered came from a mind, and was warmed by a heart which believed every thing he uttered to be the truth. An intensity of devotion characterized him, which perhaps we could not with truth attribute to any other member of the bar with whom we have been associated. Certainly it has never been my lot to be associated with any one who became so entirely absorbed in devotion to what he believed to be duty. This, sir, was not only so at the bar, but it was so in every relation of life into which his activity carried him.

I remember well, sir, when he came from this town in the trying year of 1862, in responce to the call which Gov. Curtin issued to the people of Pennsylvania; just at the time our Southern border was threatened, and a few days prior to the battle of Antietam. Serving as an assistant to adjutant General Russell, I was engaged in the duty of receiving and quartering troops and forming them into regiments after they arrived, so that they might be dispatched to the Southern border. When Mr. McAllister came there, I met him. Within one hour after his company had been assigned to its quarters I observed him traveling from the quartermaster's department to the camp, laden with equipments necessary for his company, carrying the articles on his back. In less than half an hour afterwards, I found him seated at his quarters, with an open dook defore him, as deeply absorbed in the study of military tactics as though the army was to be his abiding place for life.

I not only met him at the bar, but in other avocations of civil life. I remember how he was tried by the prejudice of the public, which would not receive the great enterprise in which he was engaged with favor; that great enterprise which leaves upon your soil a monument to his memory, and one that should make that memory fragrant to every citizen of the Commonwealth.

I met him also in another sphere where he exhibited the truth of the great intellectual and mental superiority which made him leader of the bar. It enabled him also to illustrate that humble faith, which led him to be a consistent follower of the meek and lowly Saviour of men; and there, too, this same consuming zeal was his characteristic. I feel, sir, that this is a subject upon which I cannot enlarge, and I need not enlarge in this presence. I feel, sir, that few words are needed, when we come to pay the last tribute of respect in this community, and in this atmosphere, to this man. When it was intimated to me, prehaps thirty-six hours ago, that I would be expected to say a few words, as a representative of the bar of Huntingdon, I sat down in the few minutes that I could snatch from other engagements to see whether I could sketch his character in a few words that would only be fitting upon this occasion. Let me, after apologizing for doing so, read what I hastily penned, but what I believe to be true.

"Mr. Chairman. In assembling to pay our last tribute of respect to the memory of Hugh Nelson McAllister, we all feel that we come to stand around the grave of no ordinary man. Those of us who have associated with him in the toils, the conflicts, the triumphs and the defeats which make up so much of a busy lawyer's life, soon learned and understood the intensity of his nature. Earnest thought and earnest work were the employments of his honorable and useful life. They were elements so marked in his character, that while they gave him much of the prominence he attained in the busy sphere in which he acted in life, they also doubtless had much to do in bringing that life to its untimely end. They betokened with him

"A fiery soul, which, cutting out its way,
Heated the pigmy body to decay."

"Devoted to a single pursuit, and placed where his actions would have told upon public affairs, rather than private interests, his untiring industry, and his mental vigor, would have made a man of commanding influence among any people, and in any station. He was the less a great man, because he sought not to live in the gaze of the world, or to place his name upon the fleeting breath of fame. He was great in the discharge of duty; duty as he understood it—present duty regardless of personal consequences; and at the bars of our county courts he discharged it an ability, a fidelity, a fervor of zeal, a high integrity which upon other fields would have made him a hero in arms, a great leader in the path of science, a Luther leading a reform, or a martyr dying for the right."

Whether examining his client's case, advocating it before the tribunals of justice; whether advocating the interests of his county or state, or that pursuit to which he was so much devoted; whether seeking to bring comfort to the homes of the devoted ministers who have given their lives to the service of his and their master; whether engaged in the relief of those in penury, whether in the Convention framing the organic law of the state, wherever he was, we found him to be that man of whom, coming now to stand before his open grave, we can truly say he fulfilled the scriptural injunction—he was "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Peace, sir, and honor to his memory.

Cline G. Furst, Esq., of the Clinton county bar, said:

MR. PRESIDENT: In rising on the part of the Clinton county bar, to second these resolutions, these most fitting resolutions, I feel more forcibly than ever I did in my life, that, that clergyman was eloquent indeed, who, laying his hand on the forehead of his dead monarch, said: "God alone is great." I feel that he was as truthful as eloquent.

Mr. McAllister was professedly my friend. I was his friend, and I loved him. I became acquainted with him in August, 1851, when I entered his office, and I was a student therein for two years. He was my preceptor. He practiced his profession in Clinton county, from the formation thereof, till 1866, and what Judge, or lawyer, has seen him rise in court and make a statement, that did not feel, that he believe every word he uttered. And as has been well said here, when he stated the law to be this, or boldly declared it to be that, no one has believed, he was stating, as law, what he thought, was not law. No man can call to mind in a long contested case, in any case, and I care not how much preparation attended it, how much was involved, or that it finally ended by compromise, that Mr. McAllister in anything, deviated from the strictest truth. It was never thought, he could be tempted to violate his word. Who has heard him argue a case in court, that did not say he had a logical mind? You could not hear his statement of the law, and attend on his argument of his case, without declaring that he was a man of great legal knowledge and of deep research.

To state, that he was a most profound lawyer, would be, but to assert, what we all well know.

In his decease, the bar of this county, and the bar of the commonwealth has sustained a great loss. Every honorable act of the lawyer, and his fame, as well as every particular virtue attaching to the man, becomes the common patrimony of the bar—the bar's inheritance.

I well remember some instructions he gave me. He told me he never read light literature—novels, things forgotten as soon as read. In reference to reading law, he stated to me, it was not the number of books, read, but how I read. Better to read few books, and read them well; but above all things, possess yourself of the principles of the common law, and when this you have done, you will stand upon ground, behind which no man can go; you will occupy a position, from which, you can not be dislodged.

Again, in speaking of the honesty and veracity, which should always accompany the dealings of man, with his fellow man (a thousand recollections now crowd upon me) in relation to this, he said, "A man is not always required to speak, when it is his interest to remain silent; but if he does speak he is bound to speak the truth."

No eulogim I could pronounce upon him, would add to his memory. His fame is secure. He was not ambitious, to hold office, or for anything, that he might appear great before the world; but as has been said of another, he was ambitious rather that God might pronounce him good. If I were to inquire after what was his motto, by what rule was he governed—looking over his life, from the time I first knew him, now over twenty-one years, I would plainly see that to be, rather than seem to be, was the inspiration by which he was govorned. I would write for his motto. Esse quam videri.

When you look upon his character as a man, as a citizen, as a lawyer, or in any capacity, you behold a good man; for no one can recall any moral delinquency in him, and when you give to him his most exemplary christian character, and extending through a long series of years, it is plainly seen, and we all believe that when Mr. McAllister descended to his grave, a good man ascended to God.

Hon. George Barrett; of the Clearfield county bar, said:

MR. PRESIDENT: I esteem it a great privilege to be here on this occasion to mingle my own individual sorrow with those who feel most sorrowful here over this great bereavement. It is a still greater privilege to represent the Clearfield bar, and to second the resolutions which have already been read. When the lightning flashing over the wires brought to us in Clearfield the intelligence of Mr. McAllister's death, not only his brethern there in the legal profession, but all who knew him felt to mourn and to sorrow, although he had seldom or never been there to mingle with the bar at their homes, yet, they knew him there and in other places. They knew enough of him to esteem him as a man, and to admire his character and reputation when living, and they felt it would be a privilege to mingle their sorrow with his most intimate friends.

In Cole's great pictnre of the Journey of Life, he divided that great journey into four periods—youth, manhood, middle-age, and the decline of life. It was my privilege to meet, and to associate with, and to know the deceased well and intimately during manoood, middle-age and in his declining years. I knew him only as his friends here knew him. I knew him only to know that he had merged from youth, and entered upon manhood to honor the period he had left behind; and when in a few years the wheel of time had rolled him on, and he had left that period in the history of his life to enter upon middle age, it was only to leave the past in the history of his life the better of his having lived in it. So through all that great journey until he had moved down in the declining years in his last moments.

I say it to-day sincerely, it would have done my heart good to have had the privilege of our much esteemed friend Governor Curtin, to have watched around him in his last moments; to have seen his eyes closed in death; to have witnessed the expiration of that long, useful, and pious life. He has made the journey. He has gone to his home.

We can class the duties of life under two general heads:

First, that we should all so live as to leave the world the better for our having lived in it.

Secondly, we should live so that when we approach the other world to enter upon the unending eternity, that our happiness may be vouchsafed there.

Under these two heads we may sum up the whole of life; the object of living the privilege of death. Who here can not bear honest, sincere, and heartfelt testimony to-day to the end that our deceased friend fulfilled both these missions of his life? That when he left the world he left it better for his having been in it, and who doubts that he has gone to meet a happy resurrection? He has fulfilled his mission on earth, and why should we mourn over him here? Why should we sob over his departure? His time had come. His work was done; he had fulfilled his mission; and God, in his mercy, called the deceased in his declining years to his reward.

Mr. President, when we have followed his remains to-day to their final resting place; when we have seen him interred, when we have known that his immortal spirit has winged its way to heaven, when we have dropped the last tears of sorrow upon his newly made grave; if we, on retiring, have promised that our lives shall be spent as was the life of Mr. McAllister; determined that our earthly course shall be patterned after his, that we, too, may exemplify these two great truths of his life, and have the bright prospects of the immortal crown and a happy Eternity, we will have performed our duty.

The blanks in the sixth and seventh resolutions were then filled, when, on motion of Mr. Orvis, the body adjourned to reconvene at the late residence of the deceased, at 2 o'clock P. M. to attend the funeral in a body.

"OUT WEST."

THE WESTERN EXODUS — ITS MAIN SPRING.

BY PROF. J. D. BUTLER.

LINCOLN, Nebraska, 1873.

The West draws new settlers into its capacious bosom by its fertility, its free homesteads, and its infinite demand for labor, whether skilled or unskilled. It also drives them to take shelter under its wings by competition.

New England once raised her own breadstuffs, but she has long since ceased so to do. The produce of richer and cheaper lands competed with her farmers, till it proves more than a match for their skill and energy. Many of them then turned to manufacturers, but a still greater number were hence driven west. They made their own some of the cheap acres there, and enlisted in the ranks of the agricultural army which had vanquished them.

Thus the west is constantly acting on the East with an increasing weight, and that of a larger and longer level. Here is the secret of its growth.

It is forty years since the first white families entered Iowa. But no more than one-third of its present population were born within its limits; two-thirds have come in.

Of its twelve hundred thousand today credit and six per cent. interest, and, on contracts made since 1872, no installment of the principal due till the beginning of the fifth year—and then only one-seventh.

The westward tidal wave was never so strong as to-day—but it will be stronger to-morrow. The stronger it grows the more strength it has to grow stronger. Nor can it fail to wax still more mighty till so many of the European millions have migrated that the density of population and the rate of wages shall have become well-nigh equalized on both sides of the Atlantic.

A MINIC'S LIFE.

A MAN CHAINED TO A LOG FOR NINETEEN YEARS.

We learn from Mr. Robert Glenn of the death, on the 20th ult., of Lewis Flint, at his home in Wyalusing. The deceased was 45 years of age.

About nineteen years ago it became manifest, from the sudden change that came over him, that insanity was rapidly developing itself. A log cabin was built near the one in which the family lived, where the demented man was placed for better security. Confinement seemed to aggravate his disease and increase his violence, which was hard for his poor mother to bear; but all efforts on the part of friends to have him removed to some some safe place were unavailing. The physicians called to examine his case pronounced him hopelessly insane, therefore no room for him could be found in the hospital for the insane, and to any other place they feared to have him go. Another plan, however, was adopted, which seemed to have a better effect.

A large block of wood was obtained, too heavy to carry, to which was attached a chain, and the chain fastened around his ankle in such a manner as to produce no injury. This arrangement allowed him some freedom, and he would divert himself by rolling his block around in and out of doors at pleasure, but it was always necessary to watch his movements.

It was many times necessary for his brother who had charge of him, to be temporarily absent from home, to which the invalid mother never objected. Strange as it may seem, she felt safe to be left alone with her insane son, who never, during his long insanity, when laboring under his strongest paroxysm, seemed to forget the sacred name of mother.

His sickness was of short duration. A few days before death he was attacked with a violent pain in the head, which so prostrated him, that he made no resistance to being placed upon his bed.

His reason now, for the first time in many years, seemed to be partially restored. He told his brother that he wanted to die, asked for what he wanted, and, discovering his block some distance from his couch, asked that it might be rolled to his bedside. With his own hands he wrapped the chain once more around his ankle, and there kept it until life's fever was o'er.—Grant county (Wis.) Herald.

[For the REPUBLICAN.

BAILEYVILLE, May 8, 1873.

MR. EDITOR: In your paper of May 7th, I see an article headed 'Local Option," in which some things are said of the committee appointed by the citizens of Ferguson township, to see that the law in regard to local option should be enforced, which does them great injustice, unless the facts in the case are known, and I hope, Mr. Editor, that for our sakes you will give us space in your paper to set ourselves right before the public.

The truth is this:

On the third Friday of February last a meeting was held in Pine Grove Mills and a committee of three appointed (myself one of that committee) to enforce the law against all violators.

In the course of a month reports came to me that two persons in the eastern end of our township were engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors without license. I took out a warrant for them, and took them before the justice of the peace. They both claimed that they had not violated the law since the election. We brought our witnesses before the justice and examined them, and in the case of one of the persons accused I failed to find anything against him. In the case of the other I failed in proving him guilty of any violation of law since the spring election; but in the examination of the witnesses it appeared he had been selling before the spring election. The justice of the peace thought that he had no right to be governed by our local arrangement and bound the accused over, and I being the prosecutor was compelled to follow to court. But when at court we did not, as charged in your paper, "compound the crime," but went before the grand jury and stated the case, under oath told the court that I had witnesses in court to prove the accused guilty of selling without license, selling to minors, and selling to persons of intemperate habits, and expected without doubt that a true bill would be found. But to my surprise the bill was ignored, and none of my witnesses called.

Let the blame rest where it properly belongs.

I have no sympathy with the crime of rum selling, and have no disposition to prevent the enforcement of the law in such cases, and I claim that that committee from Ferguson township were guilty of no act of this kind.

COMMITTEE NO. ONE.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of May 7th I noticed an article on Local Option in which it was stated that in the liquor cases from Ferguson township the plaintiff agreed to withhold the witnesses from the grand jury if defendant would pay the costs. Now the writer of that article entirely misrepresented the facts. In the case from east Ferguson township the witnesses were duly sworn and examined before the Grand jury and also before the District Attorney, who said the evidence of any of these witnesses was sufficient to convict, and yet the grand jury with all the evidence ignored the bill.

Now we want it distinctly understood that no agreement was ever entered into to withhold the witnesses from the grand jury. There is very little encouragement to the temperance people of Ferguson, or any other township, to take a liquor case before the court, especially if they are to be disposed of in as summary a manner as the last grand jury disposed of the cases from Ferguson. The writer of that article should place the blame were it belongs.

COMMITTEE NO. TWO.

THE VIENNA SCANDAL.

WASHINGTON, May 17.—In reply to the solemn assertions contained in the affidavit of General Van Buren, late U. S. Commissioner to Vienna, the Secretary of the State says that within a stone's throw of Liberty street, New York, is a restaurant kept by J. Southerland, who distinctly states and affirms to the authorities of the State Department, and has so stated to three prominent gentlemen of New York, who have made affidavits to the fact, that Gen. Van Buren came to him and offered him a place in the Exposition at Vienna if he would agree to divide the profits. Neither the President nor Mr. Fish entertain a doubt regarding the truthfulness of this assertion, and if they had doubts of this, there is other testimony of even a stronger character. Mr. Fish also says that the statement that Mr. Van Buren's Assistant Commissioners were appointed on his (Fish's) recommendation is utterly untrue. Mr. Van Buren was allowed to select his own men. Every one of the old board was appointed by Mr. Van Buren's request. Mr. McElrath especially was Mr. Van Buren's friend and adviser, yet when Mr. McElrath was requested to investigate charges against Mr. Van Buren, he telegraphed to the State Department upon investigation that the charges were true, and asked not only Mr. Van Buren's but his own suspension. The fullest confidence and discretion was reposed in Mr. Van Buren, and his removal would not have taken place, had not the President and Secretary Fish been certain of the necessity of such action.—Mr. Fish was Mr. Van Buren's friend from the outset. He did all in his power to advance his appointment, and feels as keenly as any man to-day the disgrace brought upon the country. In reference to an editorial in yesterday's New York Post, reflecting on Mr. Van Buren's removal, Mr. Fish says the efforts of the press will be useless in attempting to drive the Department from its manifest path of duty. Most voluminous evidence is in possession of the Government, and circumstances may necessitate its publication, which will undoubtedly vindicate in the fullest manner the action of the Government.

Singular Suicide.

George Becker, who resided on Perry Street, Allegheny, committed suicide last Friday evening in the following singular manner: He was a cigar maker, and had been out of work for some time; which caused him to be greatly depressed in spirits. After dinner yesterday, he started away from home, taking with him a small toy cannon of brass, belonging to one of his children. He stopped on the road and bought a flask of liquor, and then pursued his way towards Spring Hill.

Nothing more was seen of him until early in the evening, when a little boy who was passing through Scheckner's orchard, on Spring Hill, discovered the dead body of a man lying near the fence alongside of a shanty. The alarm was given and the body ascertained to be that of Becker. The little cannon was found beside him, and it was evident that the man had shot himself with this singular weapon. The piece had been apparently loaded with slugs, and held by the suicide directly over his heart. A large hole had been torn in his breast by the slugs, and death must have been instantaneous. The body was removed to his late home, and an inquest was held to-day.

Deceased was about forty years of age, and leaves a wife and six children. He and his family resided with his mother-in-law, and she recently sold her house. This led him to suppose that they would soon be without a home, and the depression caused by his being out of work was deepened.

A MYSTERIOUS AFFAIR.

NEW YORK, May 20.—The "Herald" publishes the facts of the case of wholesale poisoning in this city which, through the connivance of certain parties have never reached the ears of the authorities, nor have been properly investigated. It appears a young son of Mrs. Moffit, 154 West Twenty-eighth street, who was employed in a house up town in some domestic capacity, was poisoned by arsenic administered in tea, and is now in a dying state. On inquiry being made, it was found that six persons were poisoned, in the same manner in the same house up town. Suspicion attached to an old domestic employed in the family as butler, but no reason could be designed for the poisoning. Mrs. Moffit declines to state the particulars of the case to the authorities, or to the press, having evidently been paid by certain wealthy parties to keep silent on the subject. It is not known whether any of the other persons poisoned have died. It is believed the authorities will investigate the mystery.

SHOCKING CRIME IN PHILADELPHIA.

ATTEMPTED OUTRAGE AND MURDER OF A YOUNG GIRL.—SUICIDE OF THE PERPETRATOR.

Between 10 and 11 o'clock on Saturday night an alarm of fire sounded from 450 New Market street, Philadelphia. Smoke was escaping from the attic. Basement and first floor, occupied by Joseph Kollmar as a bakery. The attic was rented Jeremiah White. When the cry of fire was raised, Kollmar and one of his journeymen ran up stairs, and finding the attic door locked burst it in.

The firemen soon arrived and the fire was extinguished. Soon a cry was raised that two persons were smothering. A search revealed two bodies, those of a man and woman, with their throats cut. The woman lay on a straw mattress which had been fired, the cords having been burned off. The body had fallen on the floor in the middle of the mattress. After the body of the man, which lay on the floor with the feet toward the bed and the head to the northwest, was dragged into the back room, a razor was found where his head had lain.

A portrait ferrotype which had been found in the attic led to the recognition of the murdered girl. Some one said it was Mary Bracken, whose mother lived in Clark's avenue, running off Buttonwood street above Fourth. Officers visited the house of Mrs. Bracken and indentified the picture as that of her daughter Mary, who was her only support. She worked in a cap store, and would not have been 17 years old until the 13th of October. She was a prepossessing blonde, well formed and of cheerful temperament. Her moral character was excellent.

White was born in Ireland in 1831, and had a wife and children in Kent, England. He was both boiler-maker and shoemaker, and had lately been working at the latter trade and drinking hard. He habitually followed the girl and her mother, but the girl always avoided him. The picture was one he took from Mrs. Bracken's house last summer while she was absent from home. From what has been developed it is evident that he decoyed the girl to the room and attempted to outrage her, and failing he cut her throat, set fire to the bed with a coal oil lamp and then cut his own. In his left hand was a bunch of her hair, the girl's left thumb was cut off and her hand badly gashed. On her right hand was only one scar. Her feet were burned off and her legs were scorched up to the knees.

BELLEFONTE, PA. May 14. 1873.

"PUT ME IN MY LITTLE—LAVA—BED!" —Sang a juvenile Modoc, as he found himself beyond the lines of his "local habitation" and anticipation a prosaic capture at the hands of the "pale faces" turned and scampered back to the the domains of Captian Jack, with the hottest haste imaginable. And talking about things imaginable, one cannot convince how rapidly the "BARLEY SHEAF" cooking stove has scampered into the good graces of American housekeepers! But a few years ago, and it was a great unknown"—to day its praises are sung in the United States! This incomparable Cook has recently been much improved by the addition of a patent Anti-Dust shaking Sifter in the hearth, which sifts the ashes into a drawer, in the ash pit, and retains the cinders and coal, which can be put back on the fire through the feeder, making no dust! Another valuable improvement is an Anti-Dust Shaking and Dumping Grate, arranged so as to allow no obstruction from clinkers or coal getting between the moving grate and the stationary frame. Messrs. STUART, PETERSON & CO., the manufacturers, Philadelphia, will gladly mail Illustrated Descriptive Circulars to all applying for them. For sale by J. & J. HARRIS, BELLEFONTE, PA.

MINE EXPLOSION.

A terrible explosion occurred in the Drummond Colliery, Westville, N. S., on the 13th inst., by which fifty-nine lives were lost. The mines had not been worked for some time on account of the recent strike, and the cause of the explosion is no doubt attributable to the rapid accumulation of gas in the works in consequence. The fire occurred about 12 o clock, when the mines were in full operation, and were almost immediately followed by terrific explosions, instantly killing all the workmen below. The explosions were of such a violent nature as to shake the earth for miles around, and stones, wood and burning embers were projected high in the air, accompanied with horrible noises, giving the beholder a vivid idea of a volcanic eruption. At last accounts the fires were still raging and several more explosions anticipated.

Proper care in ventilating the mines during their suspension would doubtless have prevented this terrible sacrifice, and the sighs and moans of this grief-stricken community again cry out against such careless destruction of human life.

Perhaps, however, President Grant is to blame for it(?)

BUSINESS NOTICES.

☞ BY ONE OF THE LEADING PHYSICIANS of Philadelphia city.—A careful examination of mortuary statistics established the fact that one adult person out of every six dies of consumption, and so alarmingly is this disease gaining the ascendancy over all other ills to which flesh is heir, that its approach to one's immediate circle is regarded with perfect horror. If you will carefully examine the records of Materia Medica you will invariably discover that the general want of success in treating diseases has not been a deficiency of pathological knowledge of the functions affected, but of a suitable compound that would act upon the disease and all the sympathetic affections.

This want has at last been met in the Bitter Wine of Iron, prepared by the celebrated Dr. E. F. Kunkle, No 259 North Ninth street, Philadelphia. This excellent compound can be taken by persons with the most delicate stomach without any debilitating effect always giving strength and largely increasing the nervous energy of the patient. In all cases of pulmonary complaints it is admirably adapted to relieve the severity of the symptoms in the advanced stages of the disease, or to arrest it in its incipiency. If you want something that will give you strength, a good appetite, build up your constitution, and in place of nervousness and lack of energy give you a brisk and vigorous feeling, try Kunkel's Bitter Wine of Iron. It has already received the meed of praise from thousands who have tested its virtues, and for many years maintained its reputation with unfaded popularity.

Price $1 per bottle. E. F. KUNKEL, Sole Proprietor, No. 259 North Ninth street, below Vine, Philadelphia.

Centaur Liniment.

There is no pain which the Centaur Liniment will not relieve, no swelling it will not subdue and no lameness which it will not cure. This is strong language, but it is true. Where the parts are not gone, its effects are marvelous. It has produced more cures of rheumatism, neuralgia, lock-jaw, palsy, sprains, swellings, caked-breasts, scalds, burns, salt-rheum, earache, &c., upon the human frame, and of strains spavin, galls, &c., upon animals in one year than have all other pretended remedies since the world began. It is a counter-irritant, an all-healing pain reliever. Cripples throw away their crutches, the lame walk, poisonous bites are rendered harmless, and the wounded are healed without a scar. It is no humbug. The recipe is published around each bottle. It is selling as no article ever before sold, and it sells because it does just what it pretends to do. Those who now suffer from rheumatism, pain or swelling, deserve to suffer if they will not use Centaur Liniment. More than 1000 certificates of remarkable cures, including frozen limbs, chronic rheumatism, gout, running tumors, &c., have been received. We will send a circular containing certificates, the recipe, &c., gratis, to any one requesting it. ## MICHAEL NIXON EXECUTED.

SCENES ATTENDING THE EXECUTION.

NEW YORK, May 16.—The police arrangements for Nixon's execution were all completed last night, and this morning everything was in readiness for the final scene of the tragedy. A large force of police was on duty on Leonard, Franklin and Centre streets, guarding the approaches to the Tombs. A police guard was also placed inside the prison yard. Immense crowds congregated in the vicinity of the prison shortly after daybreak, but were kept well in order by the police. The Deputy Sheriffs detailed to attend the funeral assembled at 8 A. M., and marched through dense crowds to the Tombs, to be ready when required.

Nixon bore himself with great composure throughout the morning At half-past six o'clock this morning, he went to the chapel in the Tombs, and appeared wholly absorbed in religious meditation. On returning to the cell, he bade his prison acquaintances goodbye, shaking hands with the matron and keepers, and thanking all for their numerous kindnesses. He ate nothing during the morning, but took a little tea. At 8:30 A. M., the Deputy Sheriff and other officials took the positions assigned them. The police were drawn up in a semi-circle before the gallows. The Deputy Sheriffs entered the Tombs and shortly afterwards the procession came out.

Nixon did not betray much agitation, but seemed perfectly resigned to die. His last words before leaving his cell were: "My Saviour was crucified, why should I murmur!"

On arriving at the gallows, Nixon and those with him, including the priests, ascended the gallows. The final service for the dying was read, Nixon still maintaining his composure, and giving all attention to the words of the priests. Everything being in readiness, the rope was adjusted, the black cap drawn over his face, and exactly at nine o'clock and five minutes A. M., the trap door was sprung, and the body of Michael Nixon swung into the air. He met his death firmly. After hanging fifteen minutes, Nixon's body was cut down, life being totally extinct. It was placed in a handsome coffin, silver mounted, and given in charge of his relatives.

Owing to the disgraceful scenes at the hanging of Foster, Gov. Dix suggested that the law could be vindicated in the case of Nixon without gratifying the morbid curiosity of the community. Nothwithstanding the suggestion the Tombs prison was crowded with holders of tickets of admission to the execution issued from the Sheriff's office.

THE MODOC WAR.

CAP. JACK EFFECTS A MASTERLY RETREAT.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 19.—Dispatches have been received at army head-quarters here from Gen. Davis, dated May 18, reporting that all the Modocs have left the lava beds. Gen. Davis sent a detachment of troops to reconnoitre around the supposed stronghold of the Modocs, but they found the place vacant. Gen. Davis has sent about one hundred cavalry troops to endeavor to find in what direction the Modocs have fled. The Warm Spring Indians are out scouring the country for tracks of the Modocs, who have probably escaped to the mountains.

WISHART'S PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY FOR THE

Throat & Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lung Diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefitted and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation (which produces cough) of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw of the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipicac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

OH, WELL I REMEMBER.

Oh, well I remember,
How sadly I tore
The first checkered apron
That ever I wore.
How I boohed and I bellowed,
All flooded with tears,
When my dear mother gave me
A box on the ears,
Then a big piece of pie for the damage she'd done
To her dearest, her darling, her devilsome son!

Oh, well I remember
(They're fresh in my mind)
Those little white trousers
All buttoned behind;
How I played in the puddle,
And daubed them with dirt—
How my grandmother shook me
Nigh out of my shirt,
But promised to buy a nice sugar toy,
If I'd but remember to be a good boy.

Oh, well I remember
My advent in school—
How I got on the dunce block,
And felt like a fool;
How I pulled out the paper
From Emaline's curls,
For which I was planted
On a seat with the girls!
'Twas punishment fraught with confusion and pain;
But, oh! I should like to be put there again!

Oh, well I remember
When older I'd grown,
I had to spread clover
As fast as 'twas mown.
And the finger of Fancy
Still points to the churn,
And the hated old grindstone
I dreaded to turn;
For I churned and I turned till as weak as a cat
And sweat till as wet as a water-soaked rat.

Oh, well I remember
The old sorrel mare,
That took me to meeting
To mill, to the fair;
I rode her to plowing,
Till tender and sore
Became my poor "'tother,"
And could't ride more;
But oftentimes since I have heavily sighed,
To think of the "horse" that I daily must ride!

Flower Culture.

[Published By Request, From Home Magazine.]

There is no occupation so conducive to health, so delightful in itself, so satisfsctory in its immediate results, and so encouraging to the growth of all the finer sensibilities, as the out-door culture of flowers. Every woman, whatever her other employment may be, should try to spare time for its indulgence, if only in the most limited degree. Those who fancy they have little taste for flowers, will find that, by fostering it, that little will grow in them till it bids fair to become a passion. There are few objects in nature so beautiful as flowers, and, though short-lived, and the frailest of all erected things, they atone for this by their abundance and variety. Still, to cultivate flowers successfully, there must exist a love for them. It will not do to treat them like step-children, or rather as step-children are popularly represented as being treated. They must be watched and tended, and nourished; their wants foreseen almost before they are felt, and immediately supplied. They must be protected from cold and sheltered from heat; they must be fed and watered—and all this not spasmodically, but day after day, from the time of the first planting till the frost claims them. And under this fostering care they will thrive and seem to so enjoy life, to so exult in their existence that, as their only mode of expression, they burst out into a luxuriance of bloom that ends only with their season. The love and culture of flowers is not so general as it ought to be. There are many homes, with every requisite as regards space, where no flowers are to be seen where the grass is left to grow rank, and where unsightly weeds spring around the door-step. With a honeysuckle trained over a rustic porch at the door, and a veil of morning glories screening the windows; with a bunch of pinks and roses for June, and a display of hollyhocks and lilies for July; and with sweet-williams and larkspurs blossoming all the summer through, the humblest cottage can be made an attractive object in the landscape.

One house in a street, which displays in front of it a yard, be it ever so small, rich in floral treasures, will in all probability, make every house in the square emulous of a like distinguishing beauty. One woman of taste, who displays a hanging basket, or a vine at the window, is undoubtedly morally responsible for a score of baskets and vines that soon appear at neighboring windows.

Cooking Food.

During a recent conversation with an observing and skillful farmer, he said that by soaking corn meal and then cooking it over a slow fire for six or eight hours, the meal would become expanded double in bulk, and would feed swine twice as long as when merely soaked in cold water. He had tried it on a large herd of swine, and the experiment was made in December. The cost of the fuel must come out of the profits of cooking, but this he had not determined.

Mangle Wurzle, or Mangold Wurzle.

As the cultivation of the above root or beet is becoming more popular every year. We propose to say word in reference to its cultivation and use, The ground should be prepared as early in May as the weather will admit, good rich soil thoroughly pulverized and thrown up in ridges, or two furrows thrown together by a plow three feet apart, or the width may correspond with rows of corn. This done the seed sho'd be planted in the rows in small holes made by means of a dibble 2 inches deep and six inches apart. Where this is done care should be taken not to let weeds get a start or they will be very troublesome, which can be easily be prevented by the use of a cultivator. By the latter part of June, when the roots are about the size of a finger, the weeding out should be commenced, if the plants all grow pull out every other one so that the root shall be left in the ground one foot apart. If any should miss or the spaces should be more than one foot apart replant with those taken out, first cutting off a portion of the tape root and or leaves.

When farmers have an abundance of seed they frequently sow along the top; when the time for "weeding out comes" they take a hoe and cut out, leaving a portion to grow about twelve inches apart. In good rich soil Mangulla are the most productive roots farmers can raise, producing about one thousand bushels per acre at a cost of three cents per bushel. They take no more care than the cultivation of potatoes. The weeding out and transplanting should be done in damp weather. The writer of this article raised one hundred and forty bushels last year on $\frac{1}{8}$ of an acre, which lasted one cow all winter. We commenced to feed about the middle of December by giving her one feed per day, (the evening meal one-third bushel.) The beets were scalded and chopped up on which a quart of course bran was sprinkled, this with a quart of bran in the morning, as much cornfodder as she would eat constituted the winter feed. When we began to feed roots, the cow was giving 5 quarts of milk per day, in a week or ten days her flow of milk increased to 8 quarts, the milk being much richer. The quantity or flow of milk continued at eight quarts a day till the last of February when it gradually decreased to 5 quarts to the first of May. The cow was fresh in June 1873 with no prospects of being fresh this season. It is our candid opinion that cows properly fed with these roots during the winter season will increase their produtcion of milk twenty-five to fifty per cent, over their ordinary way of feeding, and give better milk. The seed can be had of most any seeds man at a cost of 60 cents per pound, 5 pounds being enough for an acre when sown, much less when planted.

Chemistry and Agriculture

Chemistry as applied to agriculture is not yet of any great practical value. Whether it will ever be depends upon so many contingencies that it is not safe to predict that it is likely soon to revolutionize existing systems. In this country we have scarcely reached a point where it may be experimently applied with any assurance of accuate results. We do not mean to intimate that it has not benefitted, and is not daily benefitting American agriculture, but that it is likely to enter directly into any system of husbandry as a guide to the farmer in selecting soil for a particular crop, or in applying fertilizers to a particular soil, guided by analyses made with especial reference thereto is altogether improbable; and the ludicrous manner in which some theorist speak of its utility and necessity in what is called "scientific agriculture" proves how utterly crude are these conceptions of its province, and of the possibility of its application.

Driving Colts.

If the colt is at all uncertain, it will be policy to work slowly and carefully, as one mis-move now may cause serious mischief, by the colt becoming nervous and unmanageable, and, should he be able to resist restraint, will easily cause a loss, by damage to wagon, of from five to fifty dollars. To guard against this, get three slender poles, two of them about twelve feet long each, the third about seven feet in length. Lay down the poles in the form of shafts, the front ends about twenty inches apart, the back about six feet apart. Lay the short pieces across, about six feet six inches from the forward ends, and tied on with pieces of cord. Hitch the colt into these poles, attaching tugs to the cross pieces by tying with small cord, and drive the colt around until there is perfect submission to them Driving to poles is an advantage, for two reasons; they cause less noise and excitement, and consequently are less likely to cause resistance; and should the horse kick, no danger can result—whereas one kick, against a buggy would be likely to cause serious damage and loss.

Before attempting to drive a colt to the wagon or shafts, all danger of resisting anything striking the heels should be thoroughly overcome by the course of subjection. It is always the safest and best method. Anything like a suitable cart or two-wheeled sulky can be obtained but by few, and the ease of constructing poles into the form of shafts will enable any one to easily supply the want.—*Pro. ### A PUZZLE.

Do tell me the reason, Grandmama, dear,
For truly I want to know—
Why some of the weeks in the long, long year,
So slowly and wearily go—

While some run so fast, it seems that they fly,
And soon they are far, far away,
For they won't stop a minute in hurrying by
Though I beg and beseech them to stay?

The days in a week and the hours in a day
I learned in my lesson at school;
But they change all about in the funniest way,
And I don't half believe in the rule.

Oh! do you remember last year at Aunt Sue's,
What a splendid vacation we had?
Oh, dear! if papa ever would let us choose
Where to go, Dick and I would be glad!

Such dear, downy chickens the yellow hen hatched
The very day after we came,
And then there were two yellow kittens that matched
So we two could have just the same.

What lots of blueberries grew on the hillside—
More than dozens of people could pick!
And one day I went off on a long, long ride,
With just Uncle Henry and Dick.

Our house in the rocks was the finest affair,
With such cosy hollows to sit;
And Dick was so good all the time we were there.
I don't think he teased me one bit!

But then it was so little while we could stay,
We hadn't a minute to waste;
I do think if vacations so long must delay
They needn't be gone in such haste!

I'm sure the weeks now are at least twice as long—
For nothing but studying, too—
I don't know whether grown up folks think it's all wrong,
But I say it's real mean—that I do.

But you can tell anything, grandma, I know,
So I thought I'd just ask you to-day,
For I've puzzled my head thinking over it so
And I can't make it out anyway.

A Fish Story.

"I remember one time, it had been blowing hard for several weeks on and off, and there was hardly a dish of fish to be got for love or money. Having little to do, a foreman at one of the shops here, named Tom Round, got hold of a turbot with hardly an ounce of flesh upon it, a mere skin, indeed, and amused himself by trying to sell it. But it was no go, and no wonder. The thing had been kicking about the shop for nearly a week, and had several very narrow escapes of the refuse-basket. Directly anybody took it up, being about as limp as a shirt-collar in a shower of rain, its want of flesh was at once detected. Well, what does Mr. Tom do, but cut a long stick into a skewer, and thrust it into the nape of the fish's neck, and so right along his backbone down to the beginning of his tail. It was now as stiff as if it had not been out of the water twenty-four hours. Then he gets a great wallet of wet paper, makes a pad upon the board and throws the turbot on it. It was a great success—the creature looked as plump as a bun. It lay there an hour or two, and a great deal of chaff had been fired over it, when behold you, along comes a gentleman in nankeens, buff waistcoat, and blue coat with gilt buttons. He stops and eyes the deceitful one with quite a pleasant smile.

"'How are turbots to-day?' says he.

"'Very scarce indeed,' is the answer; 'that one is seventeen-and-six.'

"'Is there enough fish for eight?' says the gentleman.

"'All depends upon what sort of feeders they are,' replied Tom, hardly able to contain himself, or keep his countenance; 'at all events, I can tell you one thing—you won't find its equal in the trade.'

"'Will you bate a half-crown?' says old nankeens.

"'Half-crown, sir!' exclaimed Tom, 'no, sir; I don't mind knocking off the odd six-pense.'

"'Very well, I'll have it,' says the other.

"Tom dursn't give it to any of the men to clean. He did that himself, popped it into a basket, a porter was called, the customer paid his money and departed, and Tom shut up the shop and departed too.

"Three days afterwards, judge Mr. Tom's horror, on suddenly discovering himself face to face with that selfsame gentleman. There was a gravity in the old chap's look that boded ill to the salesman. To use the rascal's own expression, he felt as if he should have liked the earth to open and swallow him up.

"'I believe,' said the old gentleman, fixing a keen and steady eye on the culprit, 'you are the person of whom I purchased a turbot one day this week?'

"Round's heart thumped heavily against his side. He felt the blood mount to his cheek. There was no escape.

"'It might have been my mate, sir,' replied he; 'we're very much alike.'

"'No, you are the man, I'm certain.'

"'Well, sir,' stammered the conscience-stricken one, 'I can't say. You see, sir, I see, sir, so many people in a day; sir, but if it was me, sir, I hope it ate well sir, though it can't be always depended upon this time of the year, sir.'

"As regards the fish, what there was of it,' resumed the customer, 'ate well enough, but it was remarkable poor, and no wonder, for we found the cause of its want of substance on its coming to the table.'

"Tom felt a great sense of relief at this, but his eyes nearly started out of his head with astonishment as the other continued.

"At some time that poor creature had swallowed a piece of stick, which had forced its way right down beside the spinal column to its very tail. Its sufferings must have been intense. However the thing could have lived at all, I cannot think. It is a remarkable fact in the natural history of fishes. The stick I have taken care of, and with its legend placed it in a cabinet of curiosities which I possess.'

"With that the old chap departed, leaving Tom heartily blessing him for his credulity, and thanking his own stars at having escaped so easily."—Cassuell's Magazine.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN JURUBEBA BLOOD PURIFIER

Is the most powerful cleanser, strengthener and remover of Glandular Obstructions known to Materia Medica.

It is specially adapted to constitutions "worn down" and debilitated by the warm weather of Spring and Summer, when the blood is not in active circulation, consequently gathering impurities from sluggishness and imperfect action of the secretive organs, and is manifested by Tumors, Eruptions, Blotches, Boils, Pustules, Scrofula, &c., &c.

When weary and languid from overwork, and dullness, drowsiness and inertia take place of energy and vigor the system needs a Tonic to build it up and help the Vital Forces to regain their recuperative power.

In the heat of Summer, frequently the Liver and Spleen do not properly perform their functions; the Uterine and Urinary Organs are inactive, producing weakness of the stomach and intestines and a predisposition to billious derangement.

DR. WELLS' EXTRACT OF JERUBEBA

is prepared directly from the SOUTH AMERICAN PLANT, and is peculiarly suited to all these difficulties; it will cleanse the VITIATED BLOOD, strengthening the LIFE-GIVING POWERS, and REMOVE ALL OBSTRUCTIONS from IMPAIRED AND ENFEEBLED ORGANS.

It should be freely taken, as Jerubeba is pronounced by medical writers the most efficient PURIFIER, TONIC and DEOBSTRUENT known in the whole range of medicinal plants.

What Trotty Thought Of The Baby.

BY MISS E. STUART PHELPS.

"I don't think I like the looks of it," said Trotty, very distinctly.

He meant the baby, It was Aunt Matthew's baby. Aunt Matthews, and Cousin Ginevra, and the baby's nurse, and the baby's trunks, and the baby's carriage, and the baby's crib, and the baby, were making a visit at Trotty's house.

They had just gone into the spare chamber to take off their things, and Trotty had hopped up stairs on one foot after them, with an interested air. It struck him that people were making a great fuss over that pink bundle in that freckled woman's lap—kissing it, and squeezing it, and feeling of its fingers, and chucking it under the chin; saying how it had grown; and how much it looked like papa! and what a little dear it was! and see it laughing at you! He wondered whether, if he were a pink bundle in a freckled woman's lap, they would pay so much attention to him.

"I'm four years old. I've got a tip-cart, and some rubber boots," he continued, severely. "I have free griddle-cakes for breakfast, and I eat my supper down stairs."

But nobody heard that, either. However painful it may be to inflict a gentle reproof upon one's inferiors, it is undoubtedly sometimes a necessity. Trotty, with quiet dignity, crept up behind Aunt Matthews, and jerked her by the waterfall.

"O!" said everydody talking at once, "do let Trotty see the baby. I don't believe he ever saw a baby near enough to touch it in his life,"

So they made room for Trotty beside the freckled woman, and he examined the pink bundle with attention.

It was a very pink bundle. Its flannel cloak was pink; its crocheted sack was pink; its little knit shoes were pink; its ribbons were pink; its hands were pink; and its face was very pink. It had two great black eyes, a funny little flat nose, no hair to speak of, and no teeth, whether you spoke of them or not. It stared at Trotty for a minute doubtfully; then scowled a little, scowled a little more, scowled very much, wrinkled, writhed, twisted, grew red, grew purple, opened its mouth wide, and screamed at him, then doubled its fists close, and punched him in the face.

"You frighten her, the blessed little dear!" said Aunt Matthews.

"I don't wonder," said Lill; "you've been to the syrup-pitcher, and the quince-jar, and the sugar-bowl, and the apple-barrel, since you washed your face last, to say nothing of the red crayon mark on your neck, and the black one on your nose. You've been at my paint-box, too, I know from the gamboge streak on your forehead, and the pea-green on that front curl."

"No," repeated Totty, with decision, as he was marched off to the wash-bowl, "I don't like the looks of it, and if God can't find a better-looking baby than that for me, when I'm a man, he needn't throw me down any."—Young Folks for May.

Bellefonte and County.

——Horse-back parties occasionally kick up a dust about town.

——Go to the Y. M. C. A. in Bush's Arcade on Friday night of each week.

——In the Philipsburgh saloons if you don't see what you want ask for it.

——The churches were tolerably well filled last Sunday, thanks to the milliners.

——Ex-Treasurer Wolfe is carpet-bagging through Virginia and North Carolina.

——Bellefonte's base ballists believe batting bestows blushing brows and broad backs.

——To encourage the local editor and the science of surgery throw your orange peel on the sidewalk.

——John Robson has sold the Hecla Furnace property, near Hublersburg, for $25,000, to capitalists of Tyrone.

——A teamster had his leg badly injured on Saturday last, on Bishop street. He had been examining a mule from the background.

——The borough auditors have been examining the accounts of the poor overseer. We will have something to say about it next week.

——Aaronsburg, with a population of 500, has only thirty-three widows. If there were not so many widows the population might be larger.

——A new Sabbath school was lately organized at "Whisky Hollow," this county. It is under good management, and ought to change its name.

——Tuten's (Bellefonte) Republican is covered partially with millinery goods. It is not, however, necessarily a feminine affair.—Williamsport Register.

No, not necessarily. What suggested feminine apparel? Was it Joe Furey's way of calling you "maiden ladies?"

——A lot of 30 inch shingles, 1600, sitting in the woods a short distance south of Aaronsburg were borrowed without the permission of the owner, Mr. Wm. Harter.—Reporter.

A man who would borrow shingles "sitting" in those woods, couldn't be trusted in a grave-yard.

——Just ninety-seven school children have asked us to buy a ticket to the commencement exercises of the public schools, within the last two days. Of course its pleasant when a fellow is pushing the pencil along as fast as the brain can dictate to get out of the reach of the compositors.

——The elegant new residence of ex-Governor Curtin was slightly damaged by fire on last Saturday. It had been undergoing some repairs, as Mr. Curtin expects to occupy it soon, and a coal from a tinner's furnace on the roof is said to have originated the fire. The flames were promptly extinguished, and but little damage was done to the house.

——D. G. Bush is organizing a colony to go to North Carolina, where he has made large investments. He gives glowing accounts of fine chances down there.—Centre Hall Reporter.

Col. Bush don't propose to go south permanently. He is selling enough lots about Willow Bank to furnish house room for a colony, and if he stays here another decade he will have Bellefonte built clean up to Roopsburg.

——The new Chapel, built under the auspices of Messiah's church, about midway between Zion and Pleasant Gap, in Nittany Valley, will be dedicated to the worship of Almighty God, on Sunday, the 25th day of May, 1873, at 10 A. M. Rev. M. L. Jackson and other clergymen are expected to officiate on the occasion.

——A story is going the rounds about a girl dying from tight lacing. These corsets should be done away with; and if the girls cannot live without being squeezed, we suppose the men could be found who would sacrifice themselves. We would rather devote three hours a day without a cent of pay, as a brevet corset, than see our girls dying off in that kind of style. Office hours almost any time.

——The grand commandery of Knights Templar of Pennsylvania will hold its grand conclave in this place, in May 1874. They could not have selected a more desirable place, nor accepted the hospitality of a more courteous and knightly set of gentlemen than the members of Constans Commandery. We bespeak for the Knights Templar of Pennsylvania a pleasant pilgrimage to and sojourn in our mountain city.

Bellefonte Advancing.—We are no longer in doubt as to the success of the erection of our car manufactories, as the corps of workmen are here. The office of the company is already built, and the foundation of the buildings already laid out, which will be speedily pushed to completion.

In quick succession, other works follow. Messrs. Bachelor, Sturdevant and others, have about contracted for ground for the location of a paper mill, the construction of which will be speedily commenced. And propositions have been advanced by parties for the erection of a toy factory, which will employ at least a hundred workmen, which are receiving a favorable consideration by our citizens.

Dwelling houses are now in demand, and fifty new tenant houses will be contracted for immediate erection, at once. Bellefonte is astir. Our business men and capitalists are awakening up to the interests of Bellefonte, and a united effort of all is now being put forth for its permanent and rapid growth. Capitalists from abroad are visiting our town, and becoming cognizant of the many natural advantages and facilities we have for making our town a manufacturing center, are favorably impressed, and express themselves astonishingly, that Nature having done so much for us that we have done so little for ourselves. But a new era has dawned upon us; a new life and spirit of enterprise has taken hold of us, and ere long all our water power, of which we have the finest in the country, our lumber, and our iron ore, will be wholly manipulated.

We hope, in the midst of our prospects, that the liberal disposition manifested by our merchants, bankers and business men in general, may continue, and that every encouragement will be given to every enterprise now here, and that may be attracted here by our natural advantages, and a constant flow of capital and labor must come to us, and before the taking of another census, we will be a city of 12,000 population, be a manufacturing center of prominence, and may well be able to boast of our rapid growth, prosperity and increased wealth.

Efforts are now being made which promise fair to insure the early letting and construction of the branch railroad from here to the end of the mountain, which will also be an additional help to our advance, as it will facilitate our going and coming, and put us in direct communication both east and west.

There is no good reason why our iron ore and timber should not be only converted in our midst into sawed lumber and raw metal, but into the bar, shovels, axes nails, &c., and into sashs, doors, boxes, cars and all the varied articles of use of which they are susceptible.

Our mountains teem with coal and fuel to engender power, and our valleys yield abundant supplies cheaply to the laborer, to sustain thrice the population our county now possesses. Then why ship the raw material away, and ship the manufactured article back for use, thus paying freight both ways when we could manufacture just as well and cheaply here as can be elsewhere. Then let the energy and enterprise go on without any parsimonious or self-interest drawback, and a great and successful future awaits us.

——Tom McCafferty, a muscular blacksmith, lately inflated himself with strong drink, and, as he walked down Bishop street, his lofty tread, flashing eyes and forcible gesticulation showed that his blood was up and that he was spoiling for a fight. Pedestrians carefully avoided him, and because there was no fair show for a fight Thomas became more and more enraged. The only man that he could find that didn't run from him was the big injun in front of Steele's tobacco store. Thomas glared at him, called him all the Irish nick-names on the list, shook his fist under his wooden nose, dared him to step out into the street, and he would knock some talk into him. The noble red man's stoical indifference so exasperated Tom that, stepping manfully up, he laid low the poor Indian. Thomas was arrested and fined $30 for knocking down a tobacco sign.

Now we propose a question for the next debate of the "Murdocks." If a man be fined $30 for knocking down a wooden man what would a like offence upon a natural man cost?

——The business men of Centre county will bear in mind we have the largest and best selected assortment of job and poster type in the county, the fastest and latest improved presses and first class workmen. Our facilities for the execution of every description of job-work are unequalled in Centre county, and unsurpassed in city offices, which enables us to perform our work promptly and at reasonable rates. The large and constantly increasing number of orders which have been continually pressing us since we assumed the control of the REPUBLICAN show the degree in which our efforts to please have been appreciated, and have encouraged us to go improve our machinery as to enable us to do double the amount of work we formerly could do, and to add still more to our already valuable stock of type. We hope in future to be favored with the orders of many new customers, and shall always aim to keep in advance of the public demand upon us.

——Mr. F. Bitner, of Beech Creek, Clinton county, and Miss Caroline Lucus, of Eagleville, Centre county, were married May 8th, at 2 o'clock. On May 15th, about two o'clock, Mr. Bitner died, being just one week from his wedding.

——"Why don't you publish the marriages and deaths?" If our readers have friends who marry or die, and do not care enough about them to send us a notice of it, we do not feel it incumbent upon us to run all over Centre county to hunt them up. That's why.

——At the Centre county S. S. Convention to be held in Boalsburg next week, most, if not all, of the religious denominations in the county will be represented. Ten preachers and speakers have promised to be present. They will give their best instructions concerning Sunday School work.

——Which? Is the Centre Hall Reporter the organ of the Democracy in this county or the Democratic Watchman? If the latter is, why didn't it publish Hon. J. H. Orvis' speech on the State finances? Democratic papers have copied from and praised it considerably, but the Watchman, for reasons best known to its editor, says little about Mr. Orvis or his speeches. It might please the Democracy to know why this is so.

——The people of Nittany are waking up to the spirit of the times, and in common with the rest of the county are going in for improvements. It is not car shops nor paper mills, but Messrs Huston & Rogers have just returned from Philadelphia where they have made successful negotiation, for shipping the finest stock of dry Goods, Groceries, &c., ever offered for sale in Nittany. Give them a call.

——Decoration day will be very generally observed in this place on the 30th inst. All places of business will be closed during the ceremonies from 1 until 4 P. M. Great preparations are being made for the occasion. The Town Council, School Board, Sabbath Schools and Secret Societies will parade in full force. The line will be formed at one o'clock, P. M., on Allegheny street, right resting on Bishop street, and the procession will move promptly at 1½.

——The public schools of this place will give a musical entertainment in the Court House, on next Friday evening. Miss Maggie E. Swope, the teacher of music and drawing in these schools, has been an almost invaluable auxiliary to the corps of teachers, and our citizens may expect that the entertainment will reflect credit both on children and instructors. Let the school children in their first efforts to please the public be greeted with a good audience.

Installation at Jacksonville and Hublersburg.—Rev. U. W. Condit was installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Jacksonville, May 13, at 10 o'clock, A. M. Rev. Dr. Wilson of Birmingham, preached the sermon, Rev. Mr. Moore of Tyrone, gave the charge to the pastor, and Rev. Mr. Wylie, of Bellefonte, gave the charge to the people. In the afternoon at 3 o'clock, the ceremony of installation was performed at Hublersburg, thus bringing the two churches under one pastor.

Rev. Mr. Warington, of Beech Creek, preached the sermon at Hublersburg, Rev. Dr. Wilson gave the charge to the pastor, Rev. Mr. Moore gave the charge to the people. Thus the Presbyterian elements of Nittany Valley are united and working in harmony as a unit. The pastor will preach at Zion, Cedar Springs and Washington Furnace, making a parish eleven miles long and six miles wide. This lies in one of the most beautiful valleys in the State. These two churches now look forward to a season of prosperity and usefulness.

——Ed. Perks, the wild cat banker and late unpopular treasurer of Philipsburgh borough, has many Democratic competitors for the office of State treasurer. He had better settle his official accounts at home and leave the treasury business to competent hands.

The question of a candidate for this important office is one that the Republican party will soon be called to act upon. The State Convention to put in nomination candidates for Judge of the Supreme Court and State Treasurer will be held at Harrisburg on the thirteenth of August next. Both offices are of great consequence to the people, and should be filled by the most able, responsible, honorable and fit men. It is therefore the imperative duty of the Republican press throughout the State to discuss the merits, as well as availability of the various candidates that may be named for these important offices.

Among the names mentioned in connection with the Supreme Judgeship, are those of Judges Paxton of Philadelphia, and Butler of Chester county. As to the individual merits of the two men we know but little from personal knowledge, but we do know that they have earned for themselves the reputation of being able jurists, and discharged the duties of their offices with learning and integrity, and either would make a capable and efficient member of the Supreme bench.

The office of State Treasurer will be the cause of considerable contest, and will necessarily call into exercise a good deal of political chicanery and wire pulling. The candidates now looming up for the office are more in number than can expect to get it. The names Mackey, the present incumbent, Hon. Russell Errett, and Hon. Samuel Henry are mentioned in connection with the office.

The present incumbent would probably excite more antagonism and opposition in the party than would be essential to the united effort of the party in the campaign. Errett would no doubt make a very good officer, but is about as fall of office now as is wholesome for one individual. The Hon. Samuel Henry, of Cambria county, we think would be the most available candidate yet named, and surely will make a most efficent and capable officer.

In monetary affairs he has had large experience, having been actively engaged in the banking business for the last ten years, which experience will eminently fit him for the position. He represented his county in the Legislature, the two last sessions, which is an evidence of his personal popularity, and the estimate of worth his people put upon him at home, Cambria county being generally about seven hundred of a majority, Democratic.

As a public servant he has acquitted himself honorably and well, and especially satisfactorily to his own constituency. If the convention in its wisdom should nominate him as treasurer, it would be an earnest of the party's success in the coming campaign, and if elected we would have a treasurer in whose honor and integrity the people could have the utmost confidence, and who would manage the finances of the State with an ability and economy that would be much in the interest of our tax-payers.

——The county printing business is settled and the Watchman missed a hemorrhage. The commissioners have concluded to give the county printing to the "lowest" Democratic printer and publisher. The magnificent Hinton put on his snow shoes and "wouldn't, by the good day, let a Republican dictate to me," the non-committal Foster thought it would make him more popular to stick to the party and give the job to Meek, because Kurtz had no influence with his patent paper, and he (Foster) could get his boarder, the "local" of the Watchman to show his side up in the proper way, and the sleepy Sankey nodded a drowsy assent, while Furey, the fossillated clerk and court house fodder grinder, recorded the proceedings. We don't think that the tax-payers of this county will stand this kind of under-handed spoon-victualing to the mouth-piece of the Democratic organ, much longer. The time is coming when such cattle will be compelled to graze on thinner pasture.

——At a special meeting of the Exsomnis Literary Society, of Half Moon, held May 19th, the following resolutions were read and unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, That we sincerely mourn the death of our brother and President, Rev. Henry Waite, a member of the Exsomnis Literary Society of Halfmoon, who enjoyed the highest esteem of his fellow members.

Resolved, That in his death our Society loses one of its most active and energetic members; the community in which he lived one of its best citizens, and the church to which he belonged a most sincere worker.

Resolved, That we do most heartily offer to the bereaved family, who have lost a kind husband and father, our heartfelt sympathy in this the time of their greatest distress.

Resolved, That we present a copy of these resolutions to the bereaved family, and that they be published in several of our county papers, also in the religious Teloscope.

——Many of our citizens are attending U. S. District Court at Pittsburgh this week, in the matter of the suit of the assignee of Jacob Thomas, bankrupt, vs. Curtin, Loeb & Co., the latter of whom are the successors of J. V. Thomas & Co. in the glass business. Besides the parties litigant and their respective counsel, quite a host of witnesses have been taken along as a sort of body guard, and as a convenience in all expectant emergencies. From the mutterings, the threatenings and the growlings that incessantly well up and spout forth from the respective parties, we should not be surprised to hear of trouble. That Esq. Hoy has designs of the not most peaceably disposed character toward Hon. A. O. Furst can't be denied, and that each is being seconded and encouraged by their respective supporters, in his hostility toward the other, is equally true. And as a dual combat would be a matter of intense interest to all the parties concerned, who would not be actively engaged in the little mill, we are not altogether certain if we maynot be astonished bysome alarming intelligence. But then we hope for the best, and conjecture well because of the fact that C. T. Alexander, Adolph Loeb, and a few other staid characters will be always about, provided the absence of Local Option don't tend to make it otherwise. We look, however, for their safe return the last of this or beginning of next week.

——There is a movement on foot to abolish the borough police. Petitions have been extensively circulated praying the council to take such a course on the grounds that since the local option law has gone into force that there is no need of policemen. One of the councilmen of the South ward was active in circulating a petition of this kind. The expense of keeping the three very efficient policemen we have is $500 per year. The local option law has not brought about a very great reform,—the same men that used to get drunk and make disturbances at night, are known to do the same yet, and only a fortnight ago a lady was insulted on Linn street only a little time after nightfall. Policemen are as necessary to the peace and good order of the town as they have been for the past five years. To be sure, if there were no officers to enforce the local option law, it would no doubt be more openly violated than at present, as all manner of underhanded devices are now in operation to buy and sell liquor. If it is a scheme to reduce the municipal expenses, it should receive due consideration, but if it is a plan to get the police force out of the road in order to evade the local option law, we earnestly hope that it may fail where it originated. Let the peace and safety of people upon our streets be insured at all events.

Advertisements.—To advertise is to inform the public that you are ready for business, and have something to dispose of either in the way of services or in stock. A sign over the door, or across the building may catch the eye of a few passers-by, but a well displayed notice in the REPUBLICAN is read by thousands. The live business men of Centre county are always found in print, and it is with satisfaction we recommend to our readers those business men whose advertisements are found in our columns, as the most enterprising, and keeping on hand the best supply of goods in their line at the most reasonable rates. We have patronized most of them, and have found them to be courteous in their intercourse, fair in their dealings, and they display a stock of goods which for assortment and quality is unsurpassed in this county.

——At a special meeting of the Faculty of the Agricultural College of Pa., the following resolution were unanimously adopted;

Whereas God in his allwise Providence has removed by death Hon. H. N. McAllister who has for more than eighteen years labored as one of the Trustees of this Institution with a devotion rarely equaled: Therefor, be it Resolved,

1. That the Agricultural College of Pa., have experienced in his death the loss of one who by zeal, his ungrudging sacrifice of time, money and effort in its behalf, his hopefulness in the dark hours of its history, and his influence in winning others to its support, has endeared his memory not only to its Faculty and Students, but alas, to the friends of practical education throughout the country.

2d. That as a token of respect the Faculty attended the funeral ceremonies.

3d. That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the family of the deceased, and also, that they be published in the Bellefonte papers.

For the REPUBLICAN:

GETTYSBURG, May 15, 1873.

MR. EDITOR:—A short time ago we noticed in your paper a solicitation for contributions, and we hope, therefore, you will not consider it presumption if we request a small space in your worthy columns, for the publication of an article from the historic town of Gettysburg.

According to a previous arrangement the Pennsylvania Reserve Association held its annual meeting at this place today. The majority of those present arrived on a special train this morning.—They were accompanied by the Mount Vernon band of Philadelphia. The music, which was of an excellent quality, gave additional life to the exercises.

The forenoon was spent in visiting the battle ground where they, the Pennsylvania Reserves, aided in the achievement of that glorious victory which was attended with such important results.—In the afternoon a large and appreciative audience assembled to hear the exercises. The meeting was called to order by President, ex-Governor Curtin, who made a few very appropriate remarks. He said that, assembled as a band of surviving veterans on this memorable spot, it was eminently fitting to address a throne of grace, before proceeding to business. Rev. J. B. Young, an officer in the U. S. service during the war, opened with prayer. After which a glee club formed for the occasion, sang that good old patriotic tune, "The Star Spangled Banner." The President then introduced the orator of the day—Chaplain Beale. The association was fortunate in selecting, as a representative, a man of such superior ability. We are sorry that we are not able to give you a detailed account of his speech, but must be content with a passing notice.

In his introduction he commented on the circumstances that first called them together and equipped them for the terrific struggle which ensued. The attack on Sumpter excited a feeling of insulted dignity; the Baltimore mob baptized the sons of the Union, and they resolved to consecrate themselves to their country's service. He gave a brief history of the Reserve Corps from the time of its organization until the final engagement of the war. The oration was interspersed with humorous anecdotes of soldier-life. But when he referred to the disastrous fields on which they left so many of their brave comrades, we could see the tears gathering in the eyes of those sturdy veterans. He concluded by exhorting his comrades to be as magnanimous as they were brave, and forgive their erring fellow-men. The speech was one of rare merit, and deserves more credit than we are able to give it in such a short time.

At the conclusion of the address, Gen. McCandless presented resolutions with reference to the death of Gen. Geo. G. Meade.

General McCandless pronounced an eloquent eulogy on the life, character and valuable services of the distinguished hero of Gettysburg. He said that he considered it the duty of the general Government to erect a suitable monument to his memory, on the field where he performed such valliant service for his country.

He was succeeded by Capt. McClelland, who spoke of the eminent ability of Gen's Meade and Reynolds as military chieftains.

After the election of officers for the ensuing year, and other regular business of the association was attended to, it adjourned to meet at Bellefonte in June, 1874.

This evening they held a banquet at the Spring Hotel. They had a pleasant time and all enjoyed the fellowship of old soldiers.

LONG LIVE THE VETERANS.

SPECTATOR.
